Janna Hoiberg Received Certification as Organizational Leadership Coach from John C. Maxwell

February 22, 2012

West Palm Beach, FL – John C. Maxwell a leadership expert and bestselling author of over 70 books including the 21 Laws of Irrefutable Leadership has awarded Janna Hoiberg his coveted Leadership Coach Certification.

For Hoiberg and her clients, they know that the higher their leadership lid raises, the more they will achieve, the stronger their businesses will be and their families. Many think they are good leaders, yet all of us need to step out to learn how we can be better leaders in our families, communities, government and businesses.

Hoiberg has coached executives and business owners on raising their leadership lid and now has an even stronger foundation to build upon and improve the community she lives in.

Completing this certification was one of the goals Hoiberg set out to achieve. She is very goal oriented and teaches her clients the power of written goals and leadership. Leadership skills are critical for growth in business and personal life.

“Receiving this certification allows me the credibility required to step up my leadership level,” she said.

John Maxwell has defined a coach as “...someone who can come alongside of you and can correct you without criticizing you in a way that is negative in your life. A coach is a word that means ‘come alongside’. Come alongside and share together, teach, listen and lead.” And that is exactly what Hoiberg does daily in her business.

John Maxwell’s team of coaches, teachers and speakers have been trained and certified by John to help you be intentional in your life both privately and professionally – by working with purpose and having a solid plan. Being intentional is about relying on a pre-determined strategy.

Your greatest potential value isn’t your leadership; it’s in your ability to take people with leadership potential and help them become successful leaders. You can make a greater impact by developing a small cadre of leaders than by leading a huge army of followers.
